

I understand the FCC is pondering voiding the Do-not-call list for the state of Indiana. As a resident of Indiana, I have enjoyed the benefits of the comprehensive state ordinance. I was in a situation where I changed phone numbers a few times and had to wait until I was activated on the list. I suffered. If you allow "organizations" such as banks to sell my info to their "associates" then my and my household's peace will be disturbed. I believe the FCC should follow the stringent example of Indiana & make the federal ordinance as tough as the state's. I value my time at my home and do not want telephone solicitations of any sort. Whatever I may want to purchase I can find myself. I can read the local newspaper for contributions to local, regional, national & world events I may choose. If I want to give my opinion, I have the ability to voice it, as I am doing in this forum. I don't need calls to MY home soliciting any of this. I pay for the service & have elected not to have interference by signing up for the state & national Do-not-call list. Do not let the profits of banks, etc infringe upon my right to privacy.
